In this seminar, participants will read a diverse collection of addiction-related overviews and highly cited original papers published in the past three years. Class time will be devoted to discussing—and debating—these topics, including drug legalization, the role of genetics, strategies to address the opioid epidemic, how addiction is defined (according to the DSM-V), and the treatment implications of healthcare reform.

UCLA graduate students and postdoctoral trainees who are interested in learning about addiction health service research are encouraged to enroll in the class.
